Thank You and Welcome Aboard!

The editorial team would like to thank 26 individuals who have served on Public Administration Review’s Editorial Board for the past three years. They have shown their support for the journal by reviewing articles and providing feedback to the editors about present and future plans. We recognize the following individuals for their service:

- P. K. Agarwal, TiE Global
- Pablo Alonso, Inter-American Development Bank
- Barry Anderson, National Governors Association
- Germà Bel, University of Barcelona, Spain
- Jo Ivey Boufford, New York Academy of Medicine
- George Boyne, Cardiff University, United Kingdom
- Jonathan D. Breul, IBM Center for The Business of Government
- Derick W. Brinkerhoff, RTI International
- Tom Christensen, University of Oslo, Norway
- David Coursey, University of Texas at Arlington
- Amy Donahue, University of Connecticut
- Christopher Gates, Philanthropy for Active Civic Engagement (PACE)
- Carolyn J. Heinrich, University of Texas at Austin
- Annie Hondeghem, University of Leuven, Belgium
- Yilin Hou, Syracuse University
- Michael Howlett, Simon Fraser University, Canada
- Philip Joyce, University of Maryland
- Kwangho Jung, Seoul National University, South Korea
- Sabine Kuhlmann, University of Potsdam, Germany
- Zhiyong Lan, Arizona State University and Renmin University, China
- M. Jae Moon, Yonsei University, South Korea
- Mirko Noordegraaf, Utrecht University, the Netherlands
- Robert J. Shea, Grant Thornton
- Chris Skelcher, University of Birmingham, United Kingdom
- Mary Tschrhart, The Ohio State University
- Michael C. Van Milligen, City of Dubuque, Iowa

We welcome aboard 26 new Editorial Board members for 2014–16. We are excited about their participation in the coming years.

Claudia N. Avellaneda is associate professor in the School of Public and Environmental Affairs at Indiana University. She is interested in public management and governance in developing countries, local governments, public policy, and comparative politics, with a regional focus on Latin America. Her current research examines the determinants of local government performance and highlights the role of mayors’ backgrounds, networking activities, and decision making.

Lawrence Cooley is president of Management Systems International (MSI), a private consulting firm specializing in democracy and governance, international development, and performance management. Mr. Cooley directed MSI’s Implementing Policy Change program, advising the governments of 40 countries on change management. He is a National Academy of Public Administration (NAPA) fellow and co-chair of its Standing Panel on International Affairs. He holds advanced degrees from Colombia University, Princeton University, and the Cranfield School of Management.

Cristina Diaz directs the Policy and Management Center at Rosario National University and the master’s degree program in public policy evaluation at the National University of Entre Ríos in Argentina. She earned a graduate degree in social sciences from the Latin American Social Sciences Institute and an expert diploma on local development through the International Labour Organization. Since 1984, she has taught graduate and postgraduate courses, developed research, counseled, and managed academic activities at various universities in Argentina, Italy, and Latin America; served as consultant for national, provincial, and local organizations; and was president of the Inter-American Network for Public Administration Education.

Angela M. Evans is clinical professor of the practice of public policy in the Lyndon B. Johnson School of Public Affairs at the University of Texas at Austin, where she has won numerous awards for her teaching in policy development and public management. She served as president of the Association of Policy Analysis and Management and is on the executive council of the Network of Schools of Public Policy, Affairs, and Administration. She is a NAPA fellow.

Jane E. Fountain is a distinguished professor of political science and public policy at the University of Massachusetts Amherst. She directs the National Center for Digital Government, and she is a NAPA fellow, past vice chair and current member of the World Economic Forum Global Agenda Council on the Future of Government, and appointed member of the Massachusetts Governor’s Council on Innovation.

Beth Gazley is associate professor in the School of Public and Environmental Affairs at Indiana University. Her research focuses on the intersection of the public and nonprofit sectors to examine collaborative and coproductive activities, governance, volunteerism, performance, and civil society policy. Before entering academia, she spent 16 years in consulting, fund-raising, and public interest politics.

Tobin Im is professor of public administration at the Graduate School of Public Administration at Seoul National University, South Korea. He holds a doctorate from the Paris Institute of Political Science and bachelor’s and master’s degrees from Seoul National University. His research and teaching interests include public management, organization theory, and comparative administration. He has published more than 100 journal articles and more than 30 books. He is currently studying government competitiveness from the perspectives of time and space. He is president of the Korean Association of Public Administration (beginning January 2015).

John M. Kamensky is senior fellow with the IBM Center for The Business of Government in Washington, D.C. During 24 years of public service, he served as deputy director of Vice President Al Gore’s National Partnership for Reinventing Government, special assistant at the U.S. Office of Management and Budget, and assistant director at the U.S. Government Accountability Office. He is a NAPA fellow.

Sung-Wook Kwon is associate professor in the Department of Political Science at Texas Tech University. He received his doctorate in public administration from Florida State University. His research interests include urban and local management, regional governance, intergovernmental relations, and collaborative networks. He was recipient of the 2011 Marshall E. Dimock Award that is presented for the best lead article in Public Administration Review.

Tad McGalliard is research and technical assistance director at the International City/County Management Association (ICMA). He oversees the research and technical assistance activities of ICMA’s centers for sustainable communities, management strategies, and performance analytics. He previously served four years as ICMA’s first sustainability director, in which capacity he managed many federal, foundation, and corporate funded awards. Prior to joining the ICMA, he worked as an extension associate for Cornell University’s Work and Environment Initiative and the Center for the Environment from 1995 to 2003.

Ines Mergel is associate professor of public administration and international affairs in the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs at Syracuse University. Her research focuses on innovations in technology management and public service delivery. She has published two books with Jossey-Bass/Wiley and several practitioner reports on the emerging topic of social media management in the public sector. Recently she expanded her work to include open data and crowdsourcing platforms.

Milena I. Neshkova is associate professor of public administration at Florida International University. She earned her doctorate from the School of Public and Environmental Affairs at Indiana University in 2008. She also holds master’s degrees from Indiana University in public affairs and from Sofia University in journalism. Her research interests focus on bureaucracy and democracy and how to achieve a more responsive, fair, and accountable public administration. Before joining academia, she worked as a journalist.

Regina Silvia Pacheco is associate professor at the Getulio Vargas Foundation in São Paulo, Brazil, since 1988, teaching public administration and government at the undergraduate, master’s, and doctoral levels. She is also director of the professional master’s degree program in public policy and management since 2009. From 1995 to 2002, she worked in the federal government as dean of the National School of Public Administration in Brasília.

Isabella Proeller is professor of public and nonprofit management at the University of Potsdam in Germany and speaker of the board of directors of the Potsdam Center for Public Policy and Management. In teaching and research, her areas of expertise are management-oriented reforms, in particular strategic and performance management. She serves on the boards of the International Research Society for Public Management and the European Group of Public Administration.

P. S. Reddy is senior professor at the University of KwaZulu-Natal in South Africa. He is project director of the Working Group on Local Governance and Development of International Association of Schools and Institutes of Administration (IASIA) and serves on its board of management and on the IASIA/United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs Taskforce for Effective Local Public Administration. He is an alternate board member of the Commonwealth Local Government Forum. Professor Reddy is a rated researcher and member of one of the specialist committees of the National Research Foundation of South Africa.

Sally Selden is associate dean of academic affairs and professor of management and leadership studies at Lynchburg College.
Manuel P. Teodoro’s research connects management, politics, and public policy, with emphases on executive leadership in public organizations, American local government, and environmental and regulatory policy. He is author of more than a dozen articles, as well as Bureaucratic Ambition: Careers, Motives and the Innovative Administrator (Johns Hopkins University Press, 2011), which shows how career systems foster or frustrate public entrepreneurship. His work has been funded by the National Science Foundation and the Water Research Foundation.

Gregg G. Van Ryzin is professor in the School of Public Affairs and Administration, Rutgers University–Newark. His research employs surveys and experiments to study how citizens judge the performance of government and the quality of public services. He has published widely in the top journals of public administration, policy analysis, and urban affairs, and he is author (with Dahlia K. Remler) of Research Methods in Practice (Sage, 2010).

XiaoHu Wang is professor of public management at City University of Hong Kong. He is well known as a specialist in governmental financial management in the United States. He chaired American Society for Public Administration (ASPA) Section on Public Performance and Management and has served on editorial boards of several international journals. He is a council member of ASPA's International Chapter. His research appears in most prestigious journals in public management, financial management, and environmental management.

Jiannan Wu is Distinguished Professor and executive vice dean of the School of International and Public Affairs at Shanghai Jiaotong University, China. His research interests include performance management, reform, and innovation.

Eric Zeemering is associate professor in the Department of Public Administration in the School of Public and Global Affairs at Northern Illinois University. He was a recent Fulbright Visiting Research Chair in Governance and Public Administration at the University of Ottawa. His research explores collaborative local governance in municipal service delivery and urban sustainability initiatives. He is author of Collaborative Strategies for Sustainable Cities: Economy, Environment, and Community in Baltimore (Routledge, 2014).